

5 Secrets to Find Unclaimed Money

There are around billions of dollars of unclaimed money in the US that is still waiting for its rightful owners. The unclaimed money includes security deposits, forgotten apartments, lost insurance refunds, un-cashed overtime check. Who does not like to keep a little extra cash nowadays, but the main problem is getting the same easily without any legal tangles. Most of us search for unclaimed money on an annual basis, but fail because of improper technique used for claiming the money. Here are 5 best secrets to find your missing money or even unclaimed property.

To start with, the first thing to do will be to find a possible combination or variation for your name. Finding all the possible variation of your name is necessary to make sure about any money that is unclaimed, under any of the names. For instance, if the name is Ben J Thomas then the variations can be BJ Thomas, Thomas Ben, and Ben Thomas etc. The second most important step for you to do is to search the entire databases for all states and federal governments because your money might be listed in the database of any other country. It is not necessary to have the money in the database of the same country you reside in, which is why detailed search is very necessary. I know it is very difficult to search the entire databases of different countries in a single go, which is why, it is better to use a quality all in one database, which is updated regularly. There are many all in one databases that are not updated on a regular basis so make sure you use a quality one to find your missing money. While searching the databases of different countries, filter the search by person's name and old address, as the result may not be accurate all the time. The search you do can also be based on the person's address or any other past account information, to make it more accurate.

To find the missing money on your account, you will have to go through the claiming proves properly that requires the fulfillment of certain formalities. Some formalities require submission of particular application forms along with certain documents like birth certificates and death certificates. After completing the procedure, you need to submit the form to the concerned authority, so that necessary action is taken quickly. It is also important to verify all the accounts you had since childhood, so that you can make sure there is no money is left unclaimed with the bank authorities. Search for the State Treasurer's official website to know about the unclaimed assets departments. You can find information related to abandoned gift cards and other properties of yours.

All you need to do is to conduct proper research based on all the above-mentioned steps. Following these simple steps can take you a giant step towards your unclaimed money very easily. It is high time you put all the important information mentioned above to work.
